PART 4. WRITING

Are modern teenagers still interested in reading books?

Modern teenagers are changed nowadays. They sit in front of PC the whole day, hang in chats. They think only about social websites. What's your mind, do they like reading?!

Do they read at all?! Of course, they do! The thing is not in how many books they have read, but in the quality of reading. Which books do the modern teens read?

They say: "Teenagers don't read!" To my mind it's a modern myth. In fact teens read a lot: They always in chats, in messengers, in public, in blogs etc.

Another words, they read a lot, but not "that". Parents want them to read classical literature. They would be happy if their child read Pushkin, Chekhov, but not "Star Wars" or "Harry Potter", for example. And if the teenager is interested in such books, usually parents don't pay much attention to it. They think it is not important books.

In my opinion modern teenagers have more freedom, than earlier. They are interested in social themes in the world problems.

And such kind of books are about the important things. Not about superhero and adventures. Modern teenagers are worried about finding themselves, changing the world, how not to get a disease, for example, nowadays awful -

Corona virus, which way to live. And I think they want to read about these things, and they are really interested in reading books.
