~~Write~~ Magic is important.

Remember 7-year old you being naughty in the mall. Your parents calm you down telling you a <sup>magic</sup> story about a <sup>naughty</sup> girl, who was punished in the end. How do you feel? I bet, obliged to behave better. That's what I'm going to tell you about - the role of fairy-tales, legends and myths in ~~our~~ ~~the~~ lives.

The most impressive legend I've ever heard is the legend about how our city, KAZAN, was named. According to it, once upon a time one young lady occasionally dropped a big pot, called ~~KAZAN~~ <sup>KAZAN</sup>, into a river near a small town. She was dissapointed and stood on the river bank ~~shouting~~ "KAZAN! KAZAN!". Travelers, who were walking along the river, heard lady's crying and thought that the town is called KAZAN. This story's my ~~favorite~~ favorite because I love our city and its history with all my heart.

Just imagine how many <sup>fiction</sup> stories you've heard (I mean legends etc.). They help you to make a decision in different situations. For example, when you're not happy with the things around you, ~~you~~ remember an old lady from the "Golden fish" fairytale. It helps you to fight your bad mood and be happy with what you have. One more thing about this genre is history. Most of national legends are kept in minds of entire generations and are given to younger ones as a cultural heritage of the nation. So, national legends are important while ~~we~~ our feel of patriotism and pride is being formed.

In the end, ask yourself a question: will you tell any legends and myths to your children? I suppose, yes. If so, break a leg!

To be like this or not to be like this

L Many people as kids like to listen to or read fairy-tales. In Russia parents often read their children some magical stories before the sleep. And there is a great number of fairy-tales in our country, some of which were written a long time ago by people ~~by~~ whose names we don't know now while the others are modern, written by some famous writers.

As for me, I really like fairy-tales written by V. Kaverin. One of my favourite is "A lot of good people and one envious man". It is about a girl whose father is ill so she is trying to get a medicine for him. P Unfortunately, the only man who can make it really dislikes her father and instead of helping he turns the girl into a bird. The story is really exciting, unpredictable and full of magic. And I like the way it's written too. L (orph) sp Fairy-tales aren't only entertaining, they affect our character as well. When we read stories about heroes who fight with villains and defeat them, we realise that we should be good people and then we'll get a happy ending. Fairy-tales have wisdom in them and we get some lessons by reading them. For example, when a person reads "A wolf and seven little goats", he/she realises that it is impossible to be too careful, especially when you are aware of a real hazard.

To sum up, fairy-tales are really interesting to read and people in our country love them. As we mostly read them during childhood, they form our character as well as things that happen to us.

HOW DOES A SINGLE FLOWER REPRESENT RUSSIAN CHARACTER?

It's no use denying the fact that fairy-tales are an important part of a country's culture as they form national character. In our childhood we are being told these tales full of breathtaking adventures, magic and useful life lessons hidden behind the amusing story.

Let's get ourselves involved in the wonderful world of Russian fairy-tales. 'The Red Flower' is considered to be one of the heritages of Russian folklore despite its having an exact author. Actually, 'The Red Flower' is a version of the world-famous fairy-tale 'The Beauty and the Beast', but it certainly has its own unique meaning so that's why we've chosen it for this article.

The plot of the fairy-tale is based on a story which happened to a rich merchant and his daughter. One day the merchant was to set off for a business trip so before leaving he asked his three daughters what ~~to~~ presents to bring them. Unlike the elder ones, the ~~smartest~~ <sup>modest</sup> youngest daughter asked for a beautiful <sup>red</sup> flower she had seen in her dreams. In attempt to find this flower the merchant travelled all over the world and he finally found it in an isolated garden. As soon as he picked the flower, the beast appeared ~~before~~ before him and demanded that either he or one of his daughters would live with him forever in his castle. When the merchant told his family about it, the youngest daughter insisted on her living with the beast. Then she found out he was an enchanted prince, they fell in love and the spell was finally broken.

Well, what does this fairy-tale teach us? If you are a modest person who cares about others, happiness will surely find you. And, of course, love can defeat any trouble, even the most powerful witchcraft falls apart in front of it. Moreover, 'The Red Flower' reminds us that we shouldn't judge the book by its cover and the inner worth and personality is much more important than the outer beauty.

We definitely suggest our readers to read this fairy-tale and the other Russian folklore stories themselves to understand Russian culture better and learn a few lessons. ~~Learn~~

Mermaid... Raising experience.
 Lake... Water... ~~Show~~ Shadows... The sound of burrashes... the light... those are the very words, that describe my fairytale, concerned with my country
 There is no doubt that mermaids exist. Every time when you go to swim be careful and don't go alone. That boy in fairytale just wanted to swim and faced up with ~~terrible~~ terrifying experience. A beautiful mermaid was brushing her hair with a golden comb. The comb was shining and very satisfying that the boy wanted to own it. Fortunately, he could get rid of this comb without sad consequences. <sup>after stealing</sup> Is it good to steal other's belongings? This fairytale teaches children to not to steal others things and to be honest with people.
 Fairytales like this one will influence on positive kid's development with ~~such~~ traits, such kindness, justice and honesty. It's obvious, that I chose this fairytale, because it has interesting story with important thought in it. For example, my little brother, who is only ten years now, heard this story from me, when he couldn't sleep and asked story for night. He never stole anything from me or from his peeps, but after this story he understood with his brain that stolen subjects won't give <sup>him</sup> you anything good or make <sup>him</sup> you happy, but will really disappoint and upset owner of stolen subject.

In general, I would like to say that fairy-tales, legends and old myths are storehouse of important information and thoughts, that predecessors saved ~~for~~ to make our life easier. So it is really important to tell tales to children to teach them lessons

Food for thought.

Many people consider legends and myths to be strange. Some of them are sure fairy-tales are useful only for kids. In this article I'd like to prove that myths and legends do have a great impact on people's minds, no matter how old a person is.

My favourite Russian fairy-tale is "Kolobok". This story may seem not so profound at first sight. An old couple baked Kolobok - a kind of bread that occurred to be able to move and speak. The character didn't want to stay at home, so he ran away to the forest. Kolobok met different animals during his adventurous journey. The end of the story is sad - the character was eaten by fox. I find this tale rather interesting, because it has an unusual ending. "Kolobok" differs from other stories where characters are safe and sound after all obstacles. Besides, it vividly represents negative traits of character, like selfishness and vanity. This story proves a proverb: "look before you leap."

Speaking about Fairy-tales, legends and myths in common, it seems that they play a significant role in forming our characters. People learn them in childhood, but the knowledge of different national stories always remains in their minds. Fairy-tales teach us how to behave in various occasions. Moreover, they create a picture of moral values, even if we don't notice that. For example, if children read "Kolobok", they will understand how it's important to listen to their parents' advice. Growing up, they will realise that not all people are good-willing. This fairy-tale will always follow children. Wise lessons from the story will often be taken into account by them in the future.

To sum up, I believe fairy-tales give a fascinating insight into the world that surrounds us. Well, Kolobok is not food for stomach, it is food for thought, I suppose.

Fairy-tales for everyone!

Who doesn't like fairy-tales? Such people are bound to exist, but I'm sure it's not the case with you! Made-up stories like legends, myths and fairy-tales have been an inevitable part of our life since ancient times, and every country, every region has its own set of tales. Do you have a favourite? I sure do!

"Hare and Hedgehog" is the best for me. It's a very simple but interesting Russian folk tale. As you most likely have guessed, it tells a story about a hare and a hedgehog. So, what happens? Everything starts when the hare starts boasting about how fast he is <sup>compared</sup> to the hedgehog. The hedgehog, however, doesn't agree and offers to have a race to define who is faster. But how can a small hedgehog with little legs get ahead of a <sup>cr</sup> rashy, jumping hare? I'm not going to tell all the secrets! But I'm going to say that the twist is bound to surprise you and that this story is quite enjoyable regardless of your age. You sure will remember this one, because it's different and not like most other folk tales - I remember it since young age!

But the tales are not only for fun. Many of them are trying to teach us a lesson... For example, "Shurale" is showing that wit and bravery can save one from a seemingly dead-end situation, <sup>Gr</sup> "The Wolf and the Goat" tells that sometimes kindness is key and the <sup>Gr</sup> Goldilocks tale says that you better not sleep in see the bears' house! Jokes aside, these stories play a big role in forming our personalities and world perception. So ~~it's~~ it's not only giggles!

Let's just say that sometimes fairy-tales go deeper than you might have thought. If you re-read some stories from your childhood, you will notice a lot of small things you <sup>have</sup> never paid attention to before. Isn't that a good reason to grab an old tale book and indulge in reading? It's all up to you!

The Heart of Nation

As far as I'm concerned, not every person in this world knows history of his or her native country perfectly. But, it's hard to find a person who has never heard at least one fairy-tale, one legend, one myth of his or her Motherland.

I'm definitely not a legend expert, but during my childhood I've heard a lot of fairy-tales, myths and so on. That's why I wasn't able to pick my favourite story and decided to pick the one that had come in my head first of all. "A Fox and Crow"

This Fox short fairy-tale tells us about lucky Crow, that was blessed by God and found a big wheel of cheese. Suddenly, Fox appeared from woods and started flattering Crow. After Fox's few nice words, Fox has managed to trick Crow. Crow accidentally threw away a wheel of cheese. Fox picked it up and quickly ran away from Crow.

Fairy-tales, legends and myths are one of the greatest sources of national wisdom, experience and pieces of advice. Through them our ancestors give us teach us how to be a better person, help us not to make their mistakes. "Fox and Crow", for example, taught me to listen carefully to strangers, especially if they try to flatter you, to judge not by appearance (who will argue that foxes are beautiful?), but not by words itself, but by the meaning of this words.

To conclude, I think that folk lore is the essential part of any nation. Legends, myths, fairy-tales inspired generations of people to become better persons. Tolstoy, Marcin, Tolkien ~~were~~ took their inspiration for their novels from folklore. I don't mean that everyone who read "Fox and Crow" should write a novel. But it's my firm belief that everyone should look into Folklore for its own inspiration... for its own deeds.

Nature spirits of the coldest place on Earth. Yakutia is one of the coldest regions in the world with its capital Yakutsk being the coldest city of its size. In the winter temperatures can go as low as  $-55^{\circ}\text{C}$  and during that time families stay at home and parents tell their kids legends and myths that were passed on from parent to child for generations.

Parents tell tales of spirits, monsters, animals. They tell the national epic of "Dionkhi" about the battle between the evil forces of underworld against middleworld people and heavenly gods. My favourite tales are the ones about nature spirits and forest gods that may grant luck if pleased or cast misfortune or curse if angered. They are my favourite because they care about their domains and expect the same from people and that renders nature under spiritual protection, which people still respect.

Personally, I am fascinated and ~~happy~~<sup>glad</sup> to know that hunters and gatherers respect forest spirits up to this day. They try not to take from nature more than they need and try not to cause any disrespect by littering or causing unnecessary harm. I believe that respect is a good foundation for a healthy relationship between humans and nature, because without it humans tend to exploit and pollute the nature which leads to very sad consequences.

In conclusion, I would like to say that we shouldn't treat tales, legends and myths as something archaic or silly, but as wisdom of our ancestors lived through the ages.

"Hard work always pays back" up

When I was a child my mom brought home a magazine about cars named "Top-Gear". I was really amazed by it and from that moment my great love to different magazines started. And now there is a new English-language magazine about fairy-tales from all parts of the world and even from Russia. And it has a good start because there is a big interest about it in public. vsp

I have bought it and I really loved it because there is written about my favourite fairy-tale Morozko. vgr up
It is a story about one girl who lived with her father and evil step-mother who also had a daughter. This girl was terrorised by her step-mother and one day she was sent to the forest to collect something and she met there a mythical creature Morozko who gave her a lot of wealths because she showed that she was modest and hard-working. vgr
And after that step-mother decided to send her daughter to the forest to get easy money, but Morozko gave her nothing because she was lazy and naughty. vgr
So I love it because of its message.

vgr I think that all these fairy-tales from childhood made me honest and kind and just a good person. That is why I think they play a big role in forming character. Even this tale for little kids that I described before had given me a great lesson to be always hardworking if I want to be a successful man.

vgr vgr In conclusion, I want to say that fairy-tales play huge role in forming character and this magazine makes great job by writing about it to people who didn't know about them before. 281

Everything begins in childhood. The way we see the world and the way we treat the nature and ourselves are affected by the fairy tales, legends, and myths we are told when we are kids. I believe that everyone reading this remembers a story that was meant to last forever in their heart. I'd like to share a story that had an impact on my personality.

When I was five, my grandma told me a myth about the man who lives in the woods. He's called Leshiy where we live. Leshiy, a terrible-looking inhabitant of the woods, doesn't like it when people don't obey his rules and try to harm and ruin his home. That means one should be respectful to him and not damage a single branch of a tree which is his property in order not to make him furious. When I heard the myth for the first time, I didn't believe it.

I happened to regret it sometime later. One day grandma and I decided to take a walk in the nearby forest. I was so tired that I found it entertaining to throw a stone at that bird on the tree. A few seconds later the heavy stone hit the bird. It fell down to earth. I was satisfied until I noticed that it became so much darker that I couldn't see my feet. Suddenly I realised what had just happened. It was him and he was angry. I cried and ran to the place where I thought I might have found it. I felt guilty and begged Leshiy to forgive me. Apparently, he did. To my relief, the bird was alive but slightly injured. I took it home and healed it.

This story ~~taught~~ taught me a lesson. I learned understood that how unfair I was. Since then

I do my best to make people happy and not be rude or hurtful to anybody. What I want to say is fairy-tales, legends, and myths are very important in forming our character and our attitude to everything.

One way or another, stories we are told in childhood are meant to raise kind and caring adults that respect others. If you want your child to become a good person, tell them more fairy-tales that will help them to distinguish the good from the evil.

The masterpiece of russian bakery, useful pet fish and other russian stories.

Fairy-tales, ~~or~~ myths and legends play a big role in the history of humanity. They have an impact on everything and everybody. And so do I.

Russia has a long history, so it explains a colourful variety of myths and legends. My favourite russian fairy-tale is called 'Kolobok'. It tells a story of unexpectedly very much alive piece of bread. For its round shape it was named Kolobok by ~~an old p-~~ the pair of old people who made ~~him~~ it. Unfortunately, Kolobok was too free-spirited so it ran away from its creators. Kolobok's adventure was very dangerous, but, despite its smart nature, very short. Kolobok happily escaped death a few times until the meeting with fox. Foxes are very clever creatures in russian culture. So, after playing a game with Kolobok's <sup>own</sup> pride, she tricked ~~to~~ a delicious snack into her own mouth and ate it. I really like this story and I think, it shows still perfectly shows the reality of world despite fairy-tales age. Fairy-tales are really important in developing some traits. They <sup>are</sup> also ~~was~~ created to teach little creature. For example, my little ~~was~~ nephew has ~~so~~ possesses a very bad trait: He is very lazy. But after hearing a story called 'The fairy-tale of golden fish' he changed for the better. He understood the you no one will work for yourself, and nothing will be changed until you will change it. I am really happy for him now.

So, to sum up, fairy-tales, legends and myths were always very important. They were devoted to ~~had~~ dealing with the different bad virtues of humanity. They are still <sup>very</sup> useful.

The legendary core of our nation

We all heard different kinds of fairy-tales and legends when we were kids. Some of them were believable while others seemed like complete nonsense. But nonetheless, myths play a big role in every country's life.

My favorite legend is the legend about how Kazan came to be. It tells about a small tatar tribe and its ruler searching for a place to call home. They decided that they will live on a land where their big cooking pot - Kazan - will heat up. When they came to the land we now know as Kazan City, they placed the pot on the ground and it was heated by a sleeping dragon Zolant, so the tribe began living there. It is my favorite legend because it truly tells about how united the nation was from the start and how mythical Kazan is.

Just like this legend, I think fairy-tales and myths have a strong impact on our lives and character. For instance, many young boys after hearing tales about strong and kind mighty warriors like Dobrynya Nikitich want to grow up to be heroes like them. It gives children a dream and a noble mindset, and as a result it gives the whole nation hope for a better future. But most importantly, legends get us interested in our country's history: we start reading and talking about it, and so we learn something new about our nation. After all, there is a saying that we truly become human only when we know our nation's past.

We all have different opinions and different lifestyles. But I strongly believe that we all unite through our country's legends, even if they are sometimes only partially true, the core elements are always the main aspects of our lives: friendship, love and unity.
