Part 4. Writing

The most useful thing that I have ever learned. There is a thing that many of us take for granted, a thing that I rediscovered for myself not so long ago. This realization made me wonder, how is it possible to learn the mastery of being a good person, if not through experience, either good or bad of others? How do we know a historical figure's personality or evaluate their actions, if not a person alive has ever talked to them? Had people not invented books, where would we be now? Would we remember our ancestors, let alone learn something from them? Trying as I might I could not imagine a world without a part of our lives so huge and monumental, without books. Finally, I deduced, After all, I deduce books are our best teachers.

Besides storing and guarding our history, books train our character from the early age. At first, there are fairy tales. Listening to mother's voice, kids for the first time face that fine line between "good" and "evil", learn to commiserate with, or maybe dislike someone. Those books that we read throughout our life are full of stories from all over the world and are told by people whom you have never and will never meet. They are your best, personal teachers, introducing you to unforgettable characters, embodiments of bravery and stoicism, or cowardice and contempt.

Of course, reading a book is not the same as living a life. What always hooks the reader, though, is that you always find yourself in the faces that the book presents you. You compare, you estimate, you wonder; you go through all the trials and tribulations with your character. You learn, and the cycle starts again.

WRITING

The most useful thing I have ever learned gr During life people learn many useful thing. gr From many life situations they had gr have a great experience, which always transformates lex in gr useful and helpful things. lex When I was younger, I could not distribute my own time correctly. For example, I always was late for school and other ~~sta~~ classes. My parents sp did not gr understan lex why this was happening. Once I realizide, that I need to know how to allocate time.

At the beginning, I spent less time on watching TV. Then, I tried to use my phone less often. ~~gr~~ When I did it, I became more focused and I was not gr distracted by something or someone.

lex All my free time was spent on reading books and household chores. Without a doubt my parents was proud for gr me. ~~gr~~ I even was having a new ~~hobby~~ hobby. To tell the truth, now I always carry a diary so with me.

All my plans and ~~goals~~ goals are recorded there. In my gr view It is good ~~habit~~ habit.

gr I think many people ~~have~~ have a such problem. I believe, they will change their life for the better. gr

Nowadays, I still thank many people that was suggest gr and helping me out. Without their helping, I would have gr never did it on my own.

lex So, if it is one thing, that I have learned I my ~~to~~ be lazy. so fourteen, our life is too short to be lazy. so

Part 4.

The most usefull thing I have ever learned is riding a bike. My dad taught me how to ride a bike at the age of six and it helped me ever since. Many people do know how to ride a bike, but most of them don't own or don't use it. If you don't know how to ride a bike, it is very easy to learn and is very beneficial for most aspects of your life.

Riding a bike is faster than walking and you don't need to buy a car and pay for fuel and taxes, which are very expensive.

It also helps the environment because no toxic fumes are being released into the atmosphere.

It helps you stay fit and healthy. It can cure some problems with your feet, legs, lungs and even heart.

Riding a bike also makes you happier and this is true for all types of exercise. Cycling every day improves your coordination and endurance.

It also has many benefits that will make your life better and longer. I hope this article will motivate some people to start exercising, lose weight or to take up a good hobby like cycling.

Don't be lazy, take a bike and go out.

4.1) I think that the most useful thing I've learned is to help people.

I know that everyone already learned that in their childhood but I think that it's more ~~just~~ than just that. I think that it's important to help because our world isn't very kind now. There are so many crimes that it's hard to count. Robbery, scamming, murders etc. People can ~~literally~~ easily die in a moment. Because of that, we have to help everyone while they are still alive. Even bad people can change their mind. That's what jails are made for, although I don't think they're super effective. ⁵⁰ ~~Even if you~~ If you don't care about the people around you, why don't you care for yourself? Cause if you are kind to people people are kind to you. I believe that every single human remembers all the good things that some people did to him and he will try to ^{do} ~~make~~ something good too. And if he won't, the life itself will give you something. For example get your lost thing back from a random person etc. Kindness by itself is a great characteristic to have. You get better opinion about yourself, better company and you gain charisma. ⁵⁰ I'd even say it's a must-have but everyone ~~keep~~ thinks that it's just a good side thing.

That is why I think that helping people is the best thing I learned.
