Part 4. Writing.

Although I'm not too many years old, I have learned a really great amount of things which are considered to make my life more interesting, easier and more happy. But one of these is out-standing. More important, if you want. This is the English language and the ability to speak it!

"Why?" you ~~may~~ ask. And I'll answer - because English give you many more chances and probabilities. Do you want to translate the texts of your favourite band's songs? Or, maybe, you want to read some classic English literature, like Shakespeare's sonnets, for example? Even moving to other (English-speaking) country won't be a big trouble for you knowing English.

You should know, I'm planning to work in IT, where many programmes are based on English as well as lots of tutorials, guides and forums.

Finally, I'm simply into languages. I like to communicate with people and, of course, I want to understand them. "In the beginning was the word..." Words have a great power, but I don't want to understand ^{only} what people say, also how they say it, what phrases and idioms they use. That all help me to face the thoughts they in their words.

The English language has opened a new world for me. I met new friends, read beloved books in original and even brought my dream of visiting London to life.

The most useful things I have ever learnt.

For years I've been learning more and more new things at my school and home. I'd like to highlight the most useful of them.

The first thing I find useful is that there are helpful sites which will help you to learn how to play ^{etc} musical instrument such as guitar.

The second ^{useful} thing I learnt is that the whole amount of cups of tea that British people drink a day is one hundred sixty six of millions.

In my opinion, it's always interesting to learn something about other countries, so I didn't stop after learning this fact. I also learnt that Chinese tea is more delicate and paler than British. It will help me to choose which tea to buy next time.

The fourth thing that I'm aware of and find useful is that the Coca-Cola ^{logo} ~~consists of~~ ^{haven't been} changed since the day of its creation. It's very ~~inter~~ unusual, because any other popular ^{even} logo had been changed.

And the last ^{fact} thing I ~~that's~~ ^{that's} useful is the Coca-Cola consists of soda and a new type of syrup. I like this drink very much, so it's very interesting to know what my favourite drink is made of. Also, it explains the fact that Coca-Cola ^{has} ~~had~~ been used as a washing product for a long time.

The most useful thing I have ever learned.

There are quite a lot of useful things we have learned so far. We cannot live without an ability of doing things like eating, breathing. Obviously these skills are given from the birth to every normal human being. Avoiding ⁵⁰ this, what other extremely important skills to we have? gr.

As for my opinion, the most useful thing I've learned so far is reading. Just think: you would not be able to read this article if you didn't know how to read. It sounds a bit crazy, but that's the truth. We cannot imagine the life without letters. We wake up and check our social media: what does the world tell you? We read messages from our friends, read news. Moreover most of people go to school, work etc. They use books to ~~learn~~ ⁵⁰ find out new information. Again, in most occasions, we read books to understand them.

However, when it comes to books, almost nobody really enjoys reading them. Unfortunately, recently people started to prefer surfing the Net to reading. I am keen on spending my free time this way. ³⁷

In conclusion, reading is one of the most amazing things I have ever learned. That's the part of everyone's life and it would be hard to live without this skill.

Part 4.

We learn something new every day. Our parents and teachers always give us new information, but I think, that the most useful thing I have ever learned is to forgive people.

A lot of people lose their best friends because they can't forget something that they have done wrong. They can't forgive them.

Of course, you don't need to forgive everybody, but in my opinion, if a person is really dear to you, you should try to understand why he/she has done so and forgive. Sometimes it is difficult to forget the offense but if you lose a friendship with him/her, you will regret it.

You need to realize that everybody makes mistakes and you are not an exception. Very often people say offensive things not because they really think so, but because they can't control their emotions or want to get you angry. ~~And~~ And when they understand what they have done, they really regret it. ^{EVEN} Also you can be on their place, and how you will feel, if your friend doesn't forgive you?

In conclusion, I would like to say that if you appreciate each other, you will find power to apologize and to forgive.

Part 4. Writing time.

The most useful thing I learned is what a true friend is. People have a lot of friends. But not every single one of them are the true ones. True friends are the ones that will never betray you. When you befriend someone, you must carefully acknowledge his character. Never befriend a person with a high ego. Most of the times he will let you down and leave you behind. Sadly, most of the people doesn't care about this rule, and then regret about it. Now onto the second rule. Do not get into a bad company. What do I mean by a bad company? A bad company usually consists of heavy drinkers, smokers, people who take drugs and overall dangerous persons. Stay away from such companies to keep yourself healthy. The last and the most important rule is to never trust anybody you hardly know. Never tell your secrets and personal information to a person you only know for about a week. It is a great risk for the information to be lost or spreaded without your premission. If your personal information will get into the wrong hands, it may become a serious problem. Follow these three simple rules and everything will be alright.

Part 4. Writing

The most useful thing I have ever learned.

People learn through all their life. They make mistakes and then try not to make them again. They learn a lot of useful things every day, every month, every year.

I'm 14 years old and I just started my life. I'm just opening the door to the new world, world of adults. Everyday I discover something new. And I'm learning. No, I'm not talking about school. I'm learning how to live. And if you ask me about the most useful thing I've ever learned, I'll answer you immediately. It is talking. Talking is not only chatting without any goal. I mean when you feel bad about something - say it. Don't be quiet. If you aren't talking, people won't understand you, because we can't read minds. Recently I understood that talking makes my life much easier. When I don't agree with my friend I tell him about it and we try to find a compromise. For example, last summer I went to a camp with my best friend. And there she found another girl and forgot about me. I was always alone. But I didn't tell her about my feelings. Now we're just friends. So I told her about our problem there, now we would stay together.

So the most useful thing I've ever learned is talking. Talk to each other. It is a solution to a lot of problems.
